Altar, The Unbeliever

I still remember you And what you wanted too So many years ahead The world belonged to you I still believe in you And what you want to do The things you left behind The stupid fool in you I thought you were a friend Till it all would end We stood together as one An anti-christian stand Now it's all over & amp; done With me & amp; my old band Since you met that bitch Walk along the easy way Follow trends & amp; family Convenience is the course Christianity at it's worse What I still don't understand Which or what you really meant Was it what we could create Or the way of life we used to hate You are asshole of the day Fuck your trends & amp; family Your path of convenience Fuck your christian obedience Now, Every now & amp; then I remember who But then I think about Things you have to do On your knees for God and his family Then I realize I never want to be
