Andy Williams, Tender Is the Night

Tender is the night So tender is the night There's no one in the world Except the two of us Should tomorrow find us disenchanted We have shared the love that few have known Summers by the sea, a sailboat in Capri These memories shall be our very own Even though our dreams may vanish With the morning light We loved once in splendor How tender, how tender the night Even though our dreams may vanish With the morning light We loved once in splendor How tender, how tender the night
