

Beborn Beton, Elaine

On Fridays we usually went for a walk tasting dew dripping down from the fruits as we paused, sweet as honey the dew even sweeter were you back then I could have sworn you're the one

On the way we would cross our bridge made of half rotten wood and you'd tighten your grip in your eyes something blue's, begging me to be true, and I promise to stand and be strong

Should I Cry For You
My Love Died With You
One Fine Day I Will Follow Elaine

As we set in the shadows and talked I heard some kind of noise interfering and lowered my voice hooded men drew their sword for to use them of course took our property, left us in pain

Left me heavily wounded and killed my Elaine stabbed her into the heart that she kept for my reign vengeance will be mine till the end of all time I'll be after the men that have killed my Elaine
