

Bill Hughes, Martin Eden

He was just a young sailor in old California
Wild as the wind, stormy as the sea
And he was a man of his own creation
Till he found fortune lady of high society
 And now your whole world's turning upside down
 And love with a lady that he's never found
 You want to stay inside her paradise
 To see a new world through her eyes
So you try to discover the ways of day-dreamer
As you write all the stories that burnin` your heart
But no one deviation is changed by the sailor
To a man with the vision that tells "you ain't apart"
 And now your whole world's turning upside down
 Your fame and fortune has been found
 But in the end you feel so all alone
 And high seagull should be going home

He was a sailor in old California
Wild as the wind, stormy as the sea
And he was a man of his own creation
He turned like his father back to the sea
