Bloody Mess, Broken Mirror

I feel your presence in the air that I breathe I sense your essence in the space around me

You've left me rotten to the core Frail inside How can I endure? This dizzying spiral You have left me in

I learn again
To fend for myself
Resourceful as I used to be
Now I need a little help
To see a point in making any sense

Parts of me seem to find their way inside Now I remember who I used to be long before I died And you're the one who stripped Me of my ways to stay sane How blind was I to follow you? Am I the one to blame?

Or is it that you're like a tide
Crashing at my soul
Eroding what I was at heart
A force without control
A mindless little vermin
Drilling poison in my head
You made me feel like I was gone
You made me feel like I was dead

But I am over now No longer gutted of myself I see your cracks in my reflection But the mirror stands

Now I'm alive I have spread my wings I am no longer Who I used to be

What I went through Made me a better man Now I forget you I know you understand

I have cut all the ties To my previous life I had help from nowhere So I make myself clear

The man I was is long gone
The man I am loves no one
The ones I knew are who I fear
So I disappear

The air I breathe feels like my own

All thoughts of you are now long gone And what used to feel like home Is no longer here

The road ahead is all I need And now I am free