Bob Geldof, Thinking Voyager 2 Type Things

This is the moment that we come alive I'm handing out the breath and the kiss I'm electric with the snap and the crackle of creation I'm mixing up the mud with the spit So rise up Brendan Behan and like a drunken Lazarus Let's traipse the high bronze of the evening sky Like crack crazed kings.

Voyager 2 where are you now
Looking back at home and weeping
Cold and alone in the dark void
Winding down and bleeping
Ever dimmer ever thinner
Feebly cheeping in the solar winds
I'll turn you up
Sail on sail on sail on
On past the howling storms
Through electric orange skies
And blinding methane rain
Sail on
I'll turn you up

Never bring me down to earth again Let me blaze a trail of glory across the sky Let me traipse across it's golden high Let me marvel in wonder and unfettered gaze At the bigness and implausibility of being

Yes stretch out your hands into infinity you human things
Past blind moons and ice cream worlds
You hurl your metal ball of dull intelligence
And show us all our fragile grip
As we too track with you
Slower but no less insistent
Like the only fertile seed
In the barren vault of being
Sail on
Hurtling towards the waiting tomb of empty worlds
Waiting for the final primary come of life
I'll turn you up

And I'm thinking big things
I'm thinking about mortality
I'm thinking it's a cheap price that we pay for existance
This is the moment that we come alive
This is the breath and this is the kiss

No we're in Paris In the ball gowns In the high heels In the snow

And we're spinning round Versailles in a Volkswagen Beetle

That we'd hired for the day

(At the cheap rate)

The room without the shower was cold again

"Are we already middle-aged", she said

And I said & amp; amp; quot; I feel nothing

I feel like a jelly-fish", "Mabey it's the Portuguese Men-O-Pause", she joked

And she laughed her brittle head

And we went back to bed

And I've been thinking about these things

I've been thinking about Voyager 2

And this is the moment that we come alive.
