Bob Seger, Sightseeing

It was a curious sight to me A castle older than a redwood tree Once lived in by royalty Who taxed and raped the land

Mostly now it was stone and dust Long damp halls and smells of must Faded walls and ancient rust Built on shifting sand And I wanted I wanted To smash that sucker down

It was a marvelous sight to see
A redhead workin' in a brasserie
Five foot nine built to a tee
Eyes so blue and bright
All the drunks were just circling round
I drank water and held my ground
Later on we did the town
And we caught every sight

Cause I wanted I wanted I wanted To follow her down Sightseein' freein' my soul Sightseein' leavin' my soul

It was a magical sight to me And Yves Tanguy in a gallery The 30's looking back at me As if he really knew I marveled at the artistry Predating or technology The vision there for all to see Bold and strong and true

And I wanted I wanted I wanted To take that painting home I wanted I wanted I wanted to take that vision home
