

Brodequin, Vivum Excoriari

Set on display for the public to see so they will know the fate of those who would do wrong relieved from the torture the wretched body encaged and hung alive in chains lack of food and water enhancing the weakened state forced to stand by a neck shackle or suffocate blistered and burnt from the sun infected weeping wound insects have found and feed upon the unprotected body disease has filled to weak to stand slowly suffocates, body remains displayed while birds begin removing the flesh bones become brittle from the hrash elements tar soaked clothing remains on the body still swaying encaged for one thousand days then removed and given to the family, the cage prepared for the next guest hoisted up awaiting a slow death crowds gather to witness the severely beaten and unwilling participant