

Buffalo Springfield, In The Hours Of Not Quite Rain

In the hour of not quite rain when the fog was fingertip high The moon hung suspended in a singular sky

Deeply and beyond seeing not wishing to intrude Bathed in its own reflection the water mirrored the moon

The tumbling birds have now sobered from the leaves of their nursery Like shadowy, quiet children watching sleepily