

Capewalk, Diving Away

your moon is rising higher reaches up to my chest i fell into your snakepit by demand and request you promised it was heaven in the backyard of your home i surrendered to your happiness not knowing what i know when it comes to me i've heard it before that simple truth can't be found in your stock so i'll be gone

diving away
won't justify my senses i'm hunting for the shade and i'll hide above my footsteps i'm not at home so keep on banging on my door to refugees and living-room heroes you give toys to play my walls are getting closer with every minute of your day challenge me i'll show you how i'm getting along without you now but just as long as you don't look me in the eye digest me and fool me i'll be far away from myself before it's done i'll be gone it's never raining but it's pouring down on me soon mind and screen are pledging brotherhood if only we could leave the world behind us pretending to be strong but one day the weak shall see

won't waste away my senses i know it's just a trick you play
