

Chris Difford, Fat As A Fiddle

I'm never thin I'm never svelte I always wore the bigger belt I never thought I needed help choosing
I see the men who work at the gym they have a ripple with every limb they never have this excess
It's so hard to put on my socks each morning when I wake I see myself when I was thin and the heel
Now I have tits just like my mum I'm out breath before I run I like to eat because it's fun but it comes
I always played the boy in goal cross country runs became a stroll I was the doughnut and the hole
It's so hard to put on my socks each morning when I wake I see myself when I was thin and the heel
