

Christopher Walla, Geometry &C

It used to bother me, all these shapes I can't describe; how we all fit together like wordless verse, singing da de dum dum, da de dum dum da de dum. I was there. I saw you searching the corners for a light, but it's not there. It was never there, your files and books are void of air, and your heart fails your mind

This geometry, this is the life of you and I; how we pull for a second together, and down, we're singing da de dum dum, da de dum dum da de dum. It's a call, it's a connection we make to find a light, and it's brighter than we remember it being the last time we tried...How we tried.

You don't need to speak just now; you should keep it down and let that ticker pound.

Let your heart keep the time; the loudest part is in control. Let your heart keep the time, and the hardest part is letting go. Let your heart keep the time.
