

Close Your Eyes, Scars

I can hear them say that I'll always be this way,
but am I so different that I can never change?
Their hearts won't heal all the scars that they have made
How can they forget that I am still a man?

Go ahead and push me down again.
They won't let me stand; I mean nothing to them still I find myself cold and all alone
These days never change, Why do their hearts stay the same?

I can hear them say that I'll always be this way,
but am I so different that I can never change?
Their hearts won't heal all the scars that they have made
How can they forget that I am still a man?

I can't escape the weight of my mistakes
No matter what I do, they won't let me forget Every step seems harder than the last I am crushed under the hearts of callous men.

and I keep asking, I keep asking I'm always why their hearts have stay the same

I can hear them say that I'll always be this way,
but am I so different that I can never change?
Their hearts won't heal all the scars that they have made
How can they forget that I am still a man?

this world has left me with nothing I am just another face and the ones that are called to love me turn away in disgrace
but what they can't understand I have so much more to give behind this face full of scars

I am still a man.
