

Common Rider, The Only Ones

though the hammer's blind though the weapon's primed though the water's mined you are not the last you're not iron cast not a broken mast the way that a crude anxiety knocks around underneath the crosswalk the way that the roar of unsaid things drowns out all the small talk yeah, ghost walk, till the dead grow tired of the night though you are alone you have never been the only one we will reach from our points in the dark and see where luck comes from the god of increase is not a god of peace and it troubles me

to the burning ups
to the whiskey cups to the purple dusk faith in places where the mind can't go but the heart hangs around traced in the faces where the eyes recall what's still important now yeah, trust this, and the whole blue world will be yours and mine

though you are alone

in the city of shut down lights in the crosshairs of enemy sights we will reach from the dark till we excavate a sky

(calling ... calling ...)

though you are alone

see where luck comes from
