

Confessor, Defining Happiness

a constellation of dreams crumble to this foundation on which we base them every day, a rejected day confidence is dimming setting the mood to darkness hesitating a sense of hope it may lead to hopelessness to exhibit any faith it may impede any faith therefore not to expect secures no disappointment the pain of rejection dwells in the present never to forger yesterday (always wonder about tomorrow) what's the deciding factor what determines happiness