

Dance Hall Crashers, Better Than Anything

As I was walking on the bridge the other day
I thought I saw you but you ducked and drove away
I could've sworn you told me you were gonna be out of town
I wanted to make sure but I couldn't track you down
And then the other night I tried to surprise you at your work
But the guys in your office told me you'd gone home early with a smirk
Funny thing, you weren't at home and I began to sense a change
It was then I figured out that something was a little strange
For so long I thought you were better than anything
But now I realize that you're not the way you seem

You must've thought that I was much too dumb to figure out
That you're a lying cheat that's always running about
Like all those nights you told me you were going out with the guys
Did you think I'd believe you after you told 26 lies?
For so long I thought you were better than anything
But now I realize that you're not the way you seem
