David Gilmour, You Know I'm Right

(Gilmour)

You can scream and shout with all your might Dig in your heels and hold on tight Either you are wrong or I am right

You speak the lines you've overheard The ring of truth in every word You know you're right and that's absurd

We really seem to have a problem here But it is you or me
Whatever I have going through my mind You always have to disagree
It's just a matter of opinions
It's not a simple fact
Why don't you try to see the other side
Don't turn your back

Now we survey this silent battleground Recriminations all around And still no compromise is found

Now we really have a problem And it won't just disappear And all the friends we thought we could rely on Just want to whisper in my ear

"It's just a matter of opinions You know you keep both in sight Why should you bother with the other side When you know yours is right."
