

David Houston, Where Love Used To Live

Four men in a big truck came today
They walked right in and took your all things away
And standing at the door I've watched them drive away
Now it all comes back like it was yesterday
I had stopped off for a drink on my way home
Saw an old girl friend at a corner all alone
She said let's have a drink just for old time sake
I sat down with her and that was my mistake
Now where love used to live there's just an empty home
For when jealousy moved in everything went wrong
If you'd only trusted me and had a heart to forgive
There'd be love again where love used to live
But someday I'll be looking out the door
And that same big truck will pull up here once more
I'll watch the same four men as they unload love again
And put it back the way it was before
Then where love used to live there'll be a happy home
With fate and understanding nothing can go wrong
When you've finally realized there's nothing to forgive
There'll be love again where love used to live
There'll be love again where love used to live
