Demis Roussos, Life In The City

Living in the country far away from home, how I miss those city lights, yes I'm lost when I'm alone. Grew up on the sidewalk, always had a friend, every day was something new and the nights would never end.

I can hear you oh calling, life in the city is calling. I went away without knowing changes you put me through. Calling, life in the city is calling, calling me back and I'm feeling like I belong to you.

Living in the country gave me time to see traffic jams and neon lights, baby mean a lot to me. Bought myself some freedom but it just don't feel the same as the crowded streets and subway seats and the place I got my name.

I can hear you oh calling, life in the city is calling. I went away without knowing changes you put me through. Calling, life in the city is calling, calling me back and I'm feeling like I belong to you.
