Denison Witmer, Stations

I'll be waiting on your train When you come back Through the western state Where I left you on the platform Life gets so hard But I know that you'll be fine

Stations make me think of my own travels
All the people
The places I've been through
And when you find out they're the same thing
As the people
The places where you grew

Can you promise me You still love, what you loved When you left Will you promise me You still have, what you had When you left

All I want is to be honest Like the season Let's talk about (?) But there's compassion that holds no words It holds no words I feel it as you go
