

Diesel Boy, Dragonfly

She boards a one way train
She's leaving home again
Maybe this time she'll be strong enough
Tears fill up her eyes
As her kids wave their goodbyes
Maybe this time they'll be strong enough
Finally its fare-thee-well
Thirty three, she's been through hell
It's time to ramble on
She takes off all her clothes
The petals stripped off of a rose
The pain is finally gone
And somewhere way up in the night
The moon reflects a brilliant light
And she smiles because she knows that she is free

A lonely man shaving in the sink
As he slowly sips his drink
He remembers how he used to be
The numbness in his soul runs deep
Blacker and blacker, week by week
He remembers how things used to be
His kids are grown, his wife's long gone
He stumbles home then drinks til dawn
He won't escape today
He drops his shoes onto the floor
Can't fight these demons anymore
He finally falls asleep
And somewhere way up in the night
The moon reflects a brilliant light
And he cries because he knows he can't be free