

Edith Backlund, Drown

So you strike once again I can feel your evil manner on my shoulder
you are hiding in my bedroom once again I'm holding my breath, trying not to cry, but you're covering my face
I never thought you'd let me drown
I never thought you'd wear me out
I never thought you'd break me down
but you do - all the time
So you're back in my world
I can smell your bad intentions as they're rising
You are tearing my disguises once again I'm holding my breath, trying not to care
but you're covering my face
But I never thought you'd let me drown
I never thought you'd wear me out
I never thought you'd break me down
but you do - all the time
But I never thought you'd let me drown
I never thought you'd wear me out
I never thought you'd break me down
but you do - all the time
If you love me
why is your love suffocating me
