

Emm Gryner, Doomsday

"Do everything that you've never done"
says the man on the radio.

I guess he means that the the end of world has arrived and is right around the bend.

So I stop to think about the things I like like driving in my car in the middle of the night.

But more than anything I need the last minute of your time.
More than anything I need to uncover all that I would hide.

The streets are lined with anarchy
and the beggars have no reason left to steal.
And I wonder where you are in all of this would you forget me if it comes right down to it?
But I stopped to think about the things you like like leaving town with me and vanishing from sight.

More than anything I need the last minute of your time.
More than anything I need to uncover all that I would hide.

I'd lay you down and whisper in your ear
"I know we've been to hell and all that,
but I would not change the years that we've spent.
Oh that we spent
No I wouldn't change the years that we spent."
