

Epicure, Life Sentance

Epicure - Life Sentence

She would forgive a truth
If you left her with a smile
Like you used to do

She would bring the cuffs to you
Just to make you stay a while
As if you wanted to

So lie down, sleep around
Hearts bending now will break
Your light shattering my calm
A life sentence in your arms

Breathe in now, breathe out,
a touch that suffocates
Sirens wailing in alarm
A life sentence in your arms

His arm reads like a prison cell wall
Scratching days down as they pass
Not recalling them all

And his thoughts they twist and turn Investing everything in her
And not expecting a return

Will that be good enough for her?

So lie down, sleep around
Hearts bending now will break
Your light shattering my calm
A life sentence in your arms

Breathe in now, breathe out,
a touch that suffocates
Sirens wailing in alarm
A life sentence in your arms

So lie down, sleep around
Hearts bending now will break
Your light shattering my calm
A life sentence in your arms

Breathe in now, breathe out,
a touch that suffocates
Sirens wailing in alarm
A life sentence in your arms