Faerghail, As I Wither Away

Oh, how I grieve your graven kiss In dusk's fading light Slowly I wither in my growing loneliness Like a flower in the summer's dawn Where is the beauty of your soft, pale skin As I drown in the shadows of past

Slowly drifting away from you Screams of anguish in emptiness As I mourn my loss of life

Oh, how I grieve

Watching as the snow falls down And the shadows as they dance on the walls At last, we're together as one My funeral has begun

Alone I have lived, alone I will die With you my life Forgotten Without you
