

Fair Haven, Take on your Pain

When the comfort of a home
Has silently been broken
By the screaming of a soul that's lost its way
Decisions that are final
Based on words left unspoken
And the child inside you wants to run away
When the door to all emotion
Never felt is finally opened
And it's never really been like this before
A challenge cold and tall
Lies in wait for instigation
So it doesn't have to come back for more
Take on your pain, look it in the eye
So the fingers started pointing
And the blame was being laid
But the one who does the pointing
Shows the other on their shame
Respect is what was missing
Now a storm brews in their heads
But they'll feel what they are feeling
And wind up wise instead