

Far Too Jones, I Won't Share You Anymore

Show me all the pictures of your favorite things Show me everything that you like Show me all of the architecture for all the buildings in your most favorite life
As if that would be enough to prove your strong enough

Take me to the comforts of your ivory breast and breath Take me to the secrets you keep Take me to the cradle that is famously falling from your most ill fated bough
As if that might be enough, but I know that won't be enough...I know you

(After all) I'm not expecting you to need me now Though I must confess I have been born again beside you and (After all) I'm not expecting you to need me now
When the sun comes creeping in you will find me
I won't share you anymore

I will still you
You will feel me... feel my fingers moving deep thru you
For I am always here ... I am always here
No one will want you now
No one will have you now
I must confess I have been born again beside you somehow
No one will touch you now
Who would ever want you now?
Only me.
I am born again
I won't share you anymore
