

Fiddler's Green, Apology

Your eyes were not blind, still you could not see a danger that you could not stop and not feel.

All these questions about heaven knows why lost their meaning somehow but I still wanna know how you felt when you stood all alone at the edge of your life and you've made your own choice between darkness and light and prepared yourself for the end, your step right out of your life.

And I'm sorry, that I could not take all your worries.
You said goodbye to it all and your weakest hour made you fall.
And I'm sorry, that I left you with all your worries.
Please don't blame me for your fall. Could I've ever saved you at all?

I thought we could meet up half way, but damn, you were already gone Preferring to walk that way all alone. But tell me now who had won?
There's so much that I could have shown you, so many things left undone.
All you did could have been forgiven but you didn't get along.

And I'm sorry, that I could not take all your worries.
You said goodbye to it all and your weakest hour made you fall.
And I'm sorry, that I left you with all your worries.
Please don't blame me for your fall. Could I've ever saved you at all?

And so I feel so alone. I needed you here and now you are gone!

And I'm sorry, that I could not take all your worries.
You said goodbye to it all and your weakest hour made you fall.
And I'm sorry, that I left you with all your worries.
Please don't blame me for your fall. Could I've ever saved you at all?
