

Fractured, Everytime

As the daylight fades away all the things for which I've prayed becomes the dust to make the dreams,
where no one ever hears you scream.
Another life we seem to live,
where dreams are all that we can give.
They never seem to come to me,
those words that live
inside of me.

Pollute your veins with this disease,
this life has no guarantees.
You want what you will not get,
you live your life with no regrets.
But in the end nothing's the same,
our trust is severed like our veins.
All the things I keep from you,
these lies are all true.

Burning eyes from all the tears that you've shed throughout the years.
Living live for what its worth ...
this hell on earth.
Lose control of what's inside,
inner peace has been denied.
Break it down
to build up again
because we can no longer pretend.

Pollute your veins with this disease,
this life has no guarantees.
You want what you will not get
you live your life with no regrets.
But in the end nothing's the same,
our trust is severed like our veins.
All the things I keep from you,
these lies are all true.