Funeral For A Friend, Building

Shouldering the blame Walking into frame Like a lighted silhouette, against a cotton sheet You smile in the crease.

Tin can in hand, waiting for God to come around But he never comes comes around, he never comes around.

Quite like a mouse, building up your house Just pretend the town, leaving us the pieces... Do they ever fit?

Tin can in hand, waiting for God to come around But he never comes around, he never comes around. Tin can in hand, waiting for God to come around, But he never comes around, he never comes around.
