Invited by the dream that imprisons the long night

As no one's in the room, I pray to the moon

Like a flickering light,

"if only the ache in my heart would also become small," I muttered

I walk, groping in the dawn

Bathed in light, your body is scorched in my memory

Even now, you are here

"Etched into my heart, your dim white memory is like ice..."

Perhaps you were close by but left nothing behind, nothing but shadows

Those shadows and those little sounds don't form into anything, quietly disappearing

With an innocent face, you smile at me

If those casual gestures were seen now

They'd have shown courage

Your kindness

I realized the things I was praying for were transient

I can't do anything for you

"Etched into my heart, your dim white memory is like ice..."

Those shadows and those little sounds don't form into anything, quietly disappearing

In the long night, you also cannot be seen...
