

Gary Barlow, All That I've Given Away

The telephone it never rings when you want it to ring, when it rings it's never the voice you needed to hear, it's funny how the radio sings the words you meant to say, and when you need a smile you only find a tear, I'm in deep regret,
tryin' to forget,
but hope we'll never sleep when we're apart,

All that I've given, given away,
is all that I need here tonight,
the more that I try to, try to forget,
is the more this empty heart seems to fight,
it fights for all that I've given away,
hoo ooh ooh,
all that I've given away,

The day it never goes too fast when you need it to pass, and every corner of the night loneliness sleeps, and though I'll never hear the answer to the questions that I've asked, often wonder what our future would have been,
this deep regret,
makes it harder to accept, that love could pay the price from the heart,

All that I've given, given away,
is all that I need here tonight,
the more that I try to, try to forget,
is the more this empty heart seems to fight,
it fights for all that I've given away,

Well I know the load of changes slowly turned you upside down, and the pieces of your life fall all around, and at times it's hard to recognise the pace you've always lived, where's the sun? Where's the sky?
What is love? What is life? Who am I? whoa oh whoa oh, who am I?
And I feel it now?

(all I've given away, is all the I've been living for today) it's all that I've been living for today (all I'm feeling inside) feeling inside (it's everything I'm living for today) it's all that I've given away.....
