

Hundred Reasons, Still Be Here

To ponder the worst in doubt to pick up where we left off without thinking too loud when birthdays come
You to be there just for once
But one day you surprised me, then you walk away but I will never be the same when you walk away
The most of what we have to forgive mistakes and just be glad
But one day you surprised me, then you walk away but I will never be the same when you walk away
And when you would see me now we dust off the severed senses and pull things so closely now it
And then you walk away but I will still be here and when you walk away I will always care
