Iron And Wine, God Gave A Stone

She belongs back in western Kentucky Or maybe somewhere in Tennessee Far from home theres a way to her body Though shes wind-blown and slightly

Long ago there were plums on the table Where momma smoked in the afternoon The guilty played half-asleep in the stable And she would wake when shed heard you

Papa was gone but hes still in the mud And the river runs thick with his innocent blood And God gave a stone but it rolled down the hill Its the shape of His breath, or Her breath if you will

She belongs back in western Kentucky Or even somewhere in Tennessee She was born though the womb wasnt ready To give its love to the strength in this street

Papa was gone but hes still in the mud While the river runs thick with his innocent blood And God gave a stone but it rolled down the hill Its the shape of His breath, or Her breath if you will

Long ago there was warmth from the kitchen Across the baseboards through every room She belongs back in western Kentucky And I will pray maybe shell see it soon
