Jellyfish, Glutton Of Sympathy

In the breathless hush of four a.m. In the dark sits a sad clich Cloaked in the navy blue Of slowly fading stars

Tell me how this came to be Sleeplessness talk to me She'd say over and over again

Fumbling through a cut-glass vase Passing lipstick, cotton spools Burning jealous pictures of marriages Of friends

You never asked to be The glutton of sympathy She says over and and over That this is the end

'Cause I see it in your eyes What you don't know, time to let go I see it in your eyes There is so much more out there to be learned

Such mournful words On this white snow vacant page All the lessons that she learns She packs away

Will you never cease to be The glutton of sympathy She writes over and over Again

That's when I see it in your eyes What you don't know, time to let go I see it in your eyes There is so much more out there to be learned

Tossing, turning, roll away Indecision, won't you ever make up your mind Lifetime, nighttime, wake the day 'Cause tomorrow will see If you've had your fill of sympathy

Will you never cease to be
The glutton of sympathy
Oh, don't you know the stars are all fading
Let the sunshine capture the sparkle of your smile
