Jim Robert, The Story Of My Life Upside-Down A

I think it's kinda sad To be sitting on my ass With a gel pen and notepad Trying to write lyrics that might pass The inspection of the masses When the line before the last is Just something to mask his intention To surpass this intuition That there just might be

Something more to live for Something I'm willing to forgive for God give me style and open the floor Because I know there's something more

Baby I love the rat race Knowing full well that it's nothing To worry about but I must say That it's oh so comforting Knowing that

I'm trying to apply To the dead society Of poets who will deny My requests emphaticly Just a touch of apathy And a sprinkle of eternity Collapse of our society Covered up with charity Though we always knew That there just might be
