

Josh Gracin, No One To Share The Blame

I can count a hundred reasons why but ninety-nine would still be shy of a good excuse of for why you're gone

The truth will burn you when you know you're wrong It's hard to face what you regret so holding on was better than living life and losing you I guess a liar can't escape the truth

So why was I so surprised that you found a way to finally get on with your life
And trade the lows for the highs you deserve
I'm all alone with things
I can't change and no one to share the blame

I'm tired of feeling sorry for myself
Of paying rent in this living hell
I guess it is time I started facing facts Chances are you are never coming back What gives me the right to keep up this fight

You found a way to finally get on with your life
trade the lows for the highs you deserve
I'm all alone with things I can't change and no one to share the blame

For your pain for the cost of your crying Can't undo what I did
There is no use denying

So why was I so surprised that
you found a way to finally get on with your life
Trade the lows for the highs you deserve
I'm all alone with things I can't change.
And no one to share and no one to share the blame.

I can count a hundred reasons why.