

Karine Polwart, What Are You Waiting For?

You've been waiting for the wind to change direction
Waiting for the sun to shine
You've been waiting for a new connection
But you're walking on the same old line
You've been waiting so long
How can you wait a single minute more?
You've been waiting so long
You just don't know what you are waiting for

You've been wishing for a gentle hand to guide you
For a heavenly sign
You've been wishing that a spark could burn inside you
For a little bit more time
You've been wishing so hard
How can you now wish for any more?
You've been wishing so hard
You just don't know what you are wishing for

Some say the good things come to all those who wait
But then again, they might not come at all

You've been looking to what's just around the corner
Living for another day
You've been looking to the distant skyline
Looking like you've lost your way
You've been looking so hard for something
Your eyes are getting sore
You've been looking so hard
You just don't know what you are looking for

Some say the good things come to all those who wait
But then again, they might not come at all

Some say the good things come to all those who wait
But then again, they might not come at all
