

Karla Bonoff, The Letter

Back there in your room, while you were gone
I found the pages that she wrote to you
My heart just froze, but I couldn't stop myself
I see what jealousy can do

I see now it's true, well there has been somebody
Who's had a real hold on you
And here in this bed, I guess you must have held her
How strange I never knew

She wrote that you said
You needed her to face the world
I wish that it could all just be erased
I can't believe she could take my place

As you came up the stairs
You asked "Are you all right?"
& "I'd better go" was all I said
But there in your room I saw something that I really wish I never read
