

Kirsty McGee, Cats' Eyes

she never blinks, she never falters
with a grip like steel she's got blue eyes on the horizon and both hands on the wheel and i never meant for her to love me i never asked for her second chance but i found a patch of warmth in those pale blue eyes and i thought it meant romance it never was easy to love her she was always so stubborn just like me i watch her cold hands against the leather she's got both hands on the wheel i know how you love to sacrifice but i never asked you for your soul i'm caught up in your arms tonight when i just want to be alone

she never blinks, she never falters but drives so steady through the night the white lines they pile up behind us cat-eye shadows in the lights and i never meant to leave her but it's just too hard to stay i never set out to deceive her but it's easier this way so she drives into the darkness

with a grip like steel
she's got blue eyes on the horizon
and both hands on the wheel