

Kirsty McGee, Heart

don't break my heart
it would be easy
you know it's too easy to fall through the ice

what you can't touch you cannot damage and any fool can see you would break my heart there's ice for a reason and though i can't say if ever i'll trust you to hold me that way the cold of the season has stolen away all of the words that i came here to say the sun's in the west and the moon's on the run the pull of the earth on my negligent heels the taste of your breathing still stiffens my tongue but i'm so used to running that i can't stay still for so long...
