

Kitty Wells, Woman Half My Age

You say I've lost you to a woman half my age

A lovely young acquaintance that you've made

You say your love for me you've laid aside

And she's rekindled flames you thought had died

But if your love affair with her goes wrong and if you miss the love you left at home

Come back and we'll tear out this tarnished page

And we'll forget that woman half my age

[steel]

The lines that time has etched upon my brows a face grown too familiar to you now

The look that often took the place of words you're replacing now with looks from her

But if your love affair with he...

Yes we'll forget that woman half my age
