

Krezip, Fatherthing

He came into their lives
As being their mother's friend
They thought it should be fun
'cause he was still so young

But he walked into their schools
And asked about their grades
He yelled they could do better
But they just laughed at him

But he didn't know who to bother
Everybody seemed well except him
Always when he tried to be their father
Her kids would just laugh at him

They went to parties all the time
But now he thought it should be punished

He said they couldn't go
But they just laughed at him

But he didn't know who to bother
Everybody seemed well except him
Always when he tried to be their father
Her kids would just laugh at him

Now he had yelled at them
And he had forbidden them things
But they laughed all the time
So he could better stop this fatherthing

But he didn't know who to bother
Everybody seemed well except him
Always when he tried to be their father
Her kids would just laugh at him
