Lindsay Robins, Possession

My hearts made of winter Snow falls around my bed My lifes made of anger Ashes inside my head I'm waiting for the flood to come To wash away all I've done (and) Leave me naked in the rain To start again My possessions are possessing me My obssessions are obssessed with me What would it take to let them go Burn down everything I know And just let go I carry the burden Of everyone I have been I look through the window Of everything I have seen I'm wishing that it all would change And nothing would stay the same Lift the veil from my eyes And purify My possessions are possessing me My obssessions are obssessed with me What would it take to let them go Burn down everything I know And just let go My possessions are possessing My obssessions are obssessing What would it take to let them go Burn down everything I know And just let go My possessions are possessing me My obssessions are obssessed with me What would it take to let them go Burn down everything I know My possessions are possessing me My obssessions are obssessed with me What would it take to let them go Burn down everything I know Burn down everything I know And just let go
