Lloyd Cole, The One You Never Had

well i don't know but i've been told and seen what you've left behind and i don't know if i like what i see when it's knocking at my door and you don't know if you're laughing or crying and i don't know if i care 'cause i know right here i've got me something that you never had you might laugh but what are you looking at? sending your own valentines to the one you never had well i don't know but i've been told and seen what you've left behind and all those ladies you left standing on the corner they're laughing at you now

(you never had, you never had) so you drink all night and you sleep all day 'cause you see what you've left behind and standing on the corner, hey lady got a quarter she's passing you by
