

Maggie Reilly, Talk About Your Life

Walking out in the street light midnight
Whispering wind catch me in a headlight
Talk about your life I'd like to know
It's not easy going where no one goes
And no one knows

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel

I can see you're talking to me in riddles
Do what you like you go where the wind blows
Talk about your life I'd like to know
It's not easy going where no one goes
And no one knows

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel

I reach for a certain disguise that you're weaving
And I can tell by the mist in your eyes that you're dreaming, dreaming
Do we have to be so distant?
How can you be so unreal?

In the clouds running and chasing shadows
In the crowd frozen in a window
Talk about your life I'd like to know
It's not easy going where no one goes
And no one knows

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel

Do we have to be so distant
How can you be so unreal
What's the reason for hiding and
How does crying make you feel
