Marc Almond, Two Sailors On The Beach

He wears in his heart A fish from the China Sea At times one sees it crossing Diminished in his eyes Being sea man he forgets Bars and oranges

He looks at the water

He had a soapy tongue He washed his hands and was still Level world hilly sea A hundred stars and his ship He saw the balconies of the pope And the golden breasts of the Cuban girls

He looks at the water