

Matt Kowalsky, Nowy plan

the burns of our beginnings are gone in lights like these orange white, they try to kill the night get turned on for the streets we could lay and give into them or pray for a small breeze the city plan is already made up, crossed off with names of trees that doesn't justify your wake the fences have been covered, a coating that is clear i've walked around and thought about back yards there's nothing like that here it's underneath the sidewalks and buried in your ear how could i have set off all these alarms and never have been near

*i don't care where you go
the plow, the water turned we'll finish out of place we sought out the connection, the height of where we are the building tops look down and make us hot, they don't seem very far and all across the sidewalk try not to look too hard the broken glass cannot control itself, it makes fun of the stars
