Matthew Sweet, Future Shock

I never wanted to be more than passing time And you would rather disappear than cross the line And I'm only waiting for you 'Cause I can't decide If you're only saying one thing With something else inside

From the start there is a coldness in my eye
Until the moment that I speak you won't know why
But you never ask the question
You just close the door
And you never get the answer
I was waiting for

Maybe that's someplace time won't take you Looking around I could replace you Wanting for something you have never had

But you never ask the question You just close the door And you never get the answer I was waiting for

Maybe that's someplace time won't take you Looking around I could replace you Wanting for something you have never had

You've never had You've never had You've never had
