Michael W. Smith, Kentucky Rose

Sun comes up, Sunday morn On the little church where I've been since I was born And there he stood, a hearty smile You could hear his voice ringin' out for a country mile

And he could place your mind at ease With his tenderness and a heart that aimed to please A papa's hands, a farmer's clothes Just a preacher man we called Kentucky Rose

He worked the soul like he worked the land He spoke in ways anyone could understand Simple words of simple faith And when it came to love, he would go out of his way

A helping hand, a soothing chat And he practiced what he preached, imagine that And as far as kindess goes There was none compared to old Kentucky Rose

Evenings stroll crossed shadows bridge Cause when he saw the boy tramping on that rocky ridge He knew the danger that he would face It's as if he saved the child only to take his place

For on that ridge of stone and ice, Kentucky met his maker in a sacrafice Why he's gone, God only knows Maybe for the company of his Ketucky Rose

So peaceful in his Sunday best, He was buried on a hill and laid to rest When people heard,they came in droves To say their last goodbyes to sweet Kentucky Rose

Now on that hill one flower rose They say it is the spirit of Kentucky Rose They say it is the spirit of Kentucky Rose I believe it is the spirit of Kentucky
